AND GOD SAYS . . .

More and more places try to avoid using the word Christmas by substituting "Happy Holidays" or some other innocuous verbiage. It is just understood that they must, by all means, not offend that super sensitive atheist by publicly using the name of Christ to celebrate Christmas. I wonder what might happen if each time a Christian saw or heard the greeting "Happy Holidays" if they politely encouraged those responsible to go back to wishing a Merry Christmas. Just a thought.

But as I think about this issue, I am more disturbed about things much more basic. I am disturbed that Christ is, in reality, a minimal part of our Christmas. So, in effect, those businesses that offer up "Holiday Greetings" are merely reflecting what we do in our own homes. On Christmas eve or Christmas morning the big excitement is about opening the gifts to the minimizing of Jesus Christ and the true glory and wonder of Christmas. After all, most homes talk much more about Santa Claus and gifts than they do about Jesus and his gift to us.

I am disturbed that many Christians may be more adamant about protecting the story of Santa Claus than they are about the truth of the birth of the Christ Child— even though the two are really not compatible with each other. One is true the other is a myth. One is about giving, the other is about getting. One focuses on spiritual needs, the other on material things. One meets the inner needs of man, the other the external wants of man. One is about eternal things, the other about temporary objects. And the list goes on.

And finally I am disturbed that we who judge the retail outlets do the same thing as they. Romans 2:1 says, "At whatever point you judge the other, you are condemning yourself, because you who pass judgment do the same things." Let us humble ourselves before God and admit that we have minimized the true meaning of Christmas. Then let us purpose to make Christ the central focus of our Christmas celebration this year.
